OUR GIVING ALUMNI

by Edgar M. Carlson

If a college has not succeeded in persuading its students to give after four years of experience on its campus, after having been subjected to the whole educational program of the institution, it has failed in its mission. If it trains men to "get" but fails to train them to "give", it really has no good reason for existence. It must be the hallmark of the alumni of our kind of institutions that they are "giving" people. This applies to everything about them--their vocational service, their family life, their church activity, and their community relations. But it should be evidenced also in their relation to the college that persuaded them--or at least helped to persuade them--to be that kind of people. It is in teaching people to give--of themselves, their efforts, their devotion and their means--that colleges like ours really have their mission.

If that is true, then an annual fund becomes a sort of yardstick for measuring how well we have been doing the job which is our reason for existence. It isn't the only yardstick, surely. Most alumni are giving through their churches to many things, including Christian higher education. And many of them are giving in other ways, too. But an annual fund is a specific, concrete, measurable yardstick, sent to one's alma mater, to keep its records up to date. It's like sending a sample of one's life back each year to let them know that he is keeping faith with them by being a "giving person." The amount isn't nearly as important as the fact that you are reporting in. If you do that regularly, you are likely to see to it that the sample is one which does you justice.

CAFETERIA ADDITION

An addition to present dining facilities which will double capacity to 500 persons has begun and will be completed in time for the fall quarter. The kitchen area will be expanded, and more storage area will be provided. The cafeteria will be air-conditioned, and a private dining area will be available for special occasions. The entire addition can be converted to classrooms when necessary.

The overflow room will be remodeled into two offices, a classroom, and a cloakroom. The two classrooms upstairs in the student center will become three classrooms.
