A Word With Alumni

Dear Alumnus,

On behalf of the Alumni Council, I want to thank Ron Grosh for his commitment to the Alumni Association and its progress over the past 15 years. Ron will be relinquishing his responsibilities as a Council member, and I will miss his wisdom, insight, and expertise, as will the other members of the Council.

As we begin Cedarville's 89th academic year, faculty, staff, and alumni alike can reflect with pride on the traditions of our school, and we can look with optimism and enthusiasm to our future.

This issue of Aviso salutes our fellow alumni who have pursued careers in the medical professions. At the risk of featuring just a few, we have neglected to mention others who also have excelled in their own right. Our intention is not to focus on people, but rather on what God has done and continues to do in the lives of the young people who have passed through the halls and corridors of old CC.

For those of us on campus, the arrival of new and continuing students brings occasion for rededication to our responsibility of providing the very best education in the Christian liberal arts context – a characteristic of the college through the years. As alumni, we can be very proud of the quality of students, faculty, and educational programs. However, we continually seek your involvement and ideas on how to become even better at providing an environment which encourages growth in every dimension: spiritual, intellectual, emotional, and physical.

We have had a good summer with many visitors, including prospective students and alumni. Construction continues to change and improve the facilities and appearance of the campus. There is a sense of momentum and excitement on campus, and I invite you to visit us and share that feeling.

I trust this issue of Aviso will bring you up-to-date on the many activities that have occurred, as well as coming activities, and encourage you to return to the campus and witness for yourself God's blessings on your alma mater.

Looking forward to great year!

Xau Juan

Medicine - A Means to Serve

"I realized the Lord had given me talent and abilities in science and mathematics. I thought that medicine would be the best way to use those talents and abilities in His service." This thought best explains the underlying reason why these nine Cedarville alumni have entered the medical profession. They are Jim Entner ('61), David Hull ('70), Harry Dilcher ('74), Debbie Leeke ('77), Kent Amstutz ('78), Dave Drozek ('79), Rick Smith ('80), Shawn Taylor ('80), and Raymond Miller ('82). At first glance the members of this small cross section (representing Cedarville graduates who have entered the field of medicine) seem to share little in common other than their alumni status and their chosen professions. Some are married, some are single. Some have children, some do not. Some have not yet completed their education while others have been practicing medicine for several years. However, a closer examination of their ideas and goals reveals more similarities than differences.

The reasons these alumni give for coming to Cedarville College are for the most part very similar. Jim Entner and Kent Amstutz, like many other students, followed in the footsteps of older brothers and sisters. Several, like Ray Miller, were able to foresee the need for a good background in Bible and biblical principles. "It was a real struggle. I saw all of my friends going off to Ivy League schools. I was admitted to Cornell. But I wanted to get the Bible training at Cedarville," explained Ray.

Shawn Taylor offers a rather unique explanation as to why she chose Cedarville College. After graduating from high school, her parents gave her the choice of attending Cedarville or Bob Jones University for at least two years. After attending Cedarville for the required time, Shawn, who remembers she was "not right spiritually," transferred to another college. "It was not until after I left Cedarville that I could see all that it had to offer. Cedarville was not just a college – it was a personal experience." After rearranging her priorities and values, Shawn returned to Cedarville College to complete her undergraduate studies.

How well do these physicians think they were prepared for the academic rigors of medical school? Ray Miller, who is attending University of Maryland Medical College laughingly says, "Nothing can prepare you for medical school!" While all of those questioned agree that academically they were well prepared, there were several other ways that their preparation did not pertain directly to their medical studies.

Rick Smith's comments were typical. "I felt extremely well prepared for my first year at graduate school compared to other students. I learned a lot of background material and good study habits while at Cedarville. I also learned to think critically and to depend on the Lord. In graduate school there is a lot of panic and worry, but at Cedarville I learned not to panic when hard times came." Rick will graduate from the Ohio University College of Osteopathic Medicine in June, 1985. Debbie Leeke adds, "I don't think any state university could have done any better."

Harry Dilcher, who graduated from Hahnemann Medical College in 1978, found that because of his learning experiences in courses such as Foundations of Social Science he was provided with a strong basis for debating ethical issues. This was very helpful because those around him at medical school had "no such word as immoral in their minds. Their concept of morality existed only in categories of moral or amoral."

Ray Miller found himself confronted with a difficult choice during his first two years at medical school. Every week in one of his courses he would be given a test, usually on Monday. He had to choose between attending church or using those hours to study. Even though he believes it hurt his grades slightly, Ray has attended church faithfully, largely because of the discipline he learned at Cedarville. While attending the University of Toledo Medical College, Shawn Taylor has found the same principle to be true. It has been much easier for her to attend church because she "was already used to it."

Most of these alumni had already decided on a career in the medical profession before coming to Cedarville. Their child-hood experiences with doctors helped them form images of the kinds of doctors they wanted to be. Dave Drozek recounts an experience which reinforced his later feelings about the medical profession.

"When I was little – 1 or 2 – I got very sick. My dad was unemployed. My folks said money was so tight that they had to choose between a ride in the country or a Coke – they couldn't afford both. That's when gas was 35¢ a gallon."

"Anyway, they took me to the emergency room. Dr. Walter Wagner, a D.O., came in the middle of a snowstorm, treated me and didn't charge a thing. When my folks offered to pay him later, he said not to worry about it. A bill could have devastated them at the time, and they never forgot how he helped us out. They were very impressed with him."

There are some, however, who either changed or enhanced their career plans while attending Cedarville. The experiences of Jim Entner and Harry Dilcher are two such cases. Jim came to Cedarville with the intention of becoming a doctor in the states. "I discovered when I came to Cedarville I hadn't dedicated my life to the Lord," Jim reflects. "When you dedicate your life your interests become His interests." As a result, Jim has served as a medical missionary to the Philippine Islands since 1967.

Harry began his undergraduate studies at Baylor University in Waco, Texas, as a pre-med major. After a year of this "cutthroat atmosphere," he transferred to Cedarville where he decided to major in English rather than pursuing a career in medicine. Harry found the sciences were taught better at Cedarville than at Baylor. After one quarter, he switched his major to biology/chemistry and began preparations for a career in medicine.

The future plans of these alumni are somewhat varied. They range from completing military obligations to becoming medical missionaries. Jim Entner and David Hull have firmly established carreers. As previously mentioned, Jim is a medical missionary to the Philippines, and David has his own family practice in Burlington, Iowa.

Dave Drozek examines a patient.

Kent Amstutz and Rick Smith are both on military scholar-ships that require them to serve as Air Force officers for three and four years, respectively. This payback service begins upon completion of all medical training. Kent, who graduated with a D.O. degree from the University of Osteopathic Medicine and Surgery, Des Moines, Iowa, in 1983, particularly enjoys working in pediatrics. He would also like to serve as a short term medical missionary, filling in for those who return to the states on furlough. Rick's goal is to one day set up a family practice in a rural mountain area with his wife, Susan, and two sons.

Debbie Leeke has a very specific idea of what she will do after she has completed her medical training. Debbie, who graduated from The University of Health Sciences – College of Osteopathic Medicine in Kansas City, Missouri, this past spring wants to set up a general practice in her home state, Missouri.

After working with an internal medical group practice in Defiance, Ohio, Harry Dilcher has realized that his interests lie in cancer research. As his ultimate goal, Harry would like to have further schooling in cancer study and someday teach and write about this specific area of medicine.

Finally, Dave Drozek and Shawn Taylor share a very similar goal as the result of a summer they both spent on a missionary internship in Africa. They both plan to become medical missionaries.

Dave, who graduated from Ohio University College of Osteopathic Medicine in June, commented on his decision. "My current plans are to go into missions, to return to Africa. If you are in a very rural area, and you're the only person, it's going to be very family practice oriented — but you're also going to need surgery skills. So, I plan to take a surgery residency."

Dave says that he is planning to do his mission work in Togo. "My desire to go there (Africa) has to do with my relationship with Christ. It's just a desire to return to Him what He's given to me."

Regardless of the differences between these "medical grads," they all share in common many warm memories of their alma mater. Also, they all serve as sources of challenge and encouragement for students whose desire it is to enter the field of medicine. They are all demonstrating themselves to be most useable tools in the hands of the Great Physician.

"To provide an opportunity to study nursing in a scholarly environment where man is viewed as created in the image of God, and where Christian faculty serve as role models in meeting the spiritual needs of patients and families" is the stated purpose of the Nursing Department, Cedarville College's most recent program designed to prepare students for a career in medicine.

In meeting the demands of the highly structured and rigorous curriculum required by the State of Ohio Board of Nursing, as well as the previously stated goals, a faculty with much expertise and a broad range of skills and abilities is necessary. Irene Alyn, Ph.D., chairs the department and is responsible for teaching a variety of courses. Dr. Alyn has had extensive experience in nursing and has authored several textbooks and articles. In addition to these responsibilities, she serves as a manuscript editor for three national nursing journals and is a committee member for two national nursing organizations. Specializing in pediatric nursing, Lois Baker, M.S.N., is a member of a team which teaches courses pertaining to the care of children and adults with physiological imbalances, and advanced clinical nursing. Janet Bauer, M.S., specializing in medical-surgical nursing and newborn assessment, and Mark Klimek, M.S.N., who specializes in medical-surgical and psychiatric nursing, are the other members of this team. Ruth Slocum, M.S.N., trains her students in maternal and family health nursing. Sharon Stanley, M.S.N., and Maureen Salladay, M.P.H., work together in giving students an understanding of community health nursing.

Concerning the nursing program which began in 1981, Dr. Alyn commented, "What a thrill it is for me to see what began as a plan has been honored by God." In 1985, the first class of nursing students will graduate with a bachelor of science in nursing. The department, which is approved by the Ohio Board of Regents and the State of Ohio Board of Nursing, will be seeking accreditation from the National League of Nursing.

Students enrolled in the nursing program receive the same liberal arts education that any other student receives. Their course of study includes many hours of general education classes along with the specific courses relating to their nursing major and clinical experiences in area hospitals. When asked why a nursing program is important to Cedarville College, Dr. Alyn explained, "You can't just study nursing apart from the Word of God. We're not only trying to teach students to do something but to be someone – a Christian nurse with a Christian set of values."

As a new department, the Department of Nursing has several needs. A learning lab where students are able to practice skills learned in class in a more private environment is a necessity. The addition of another faculty member would ease the heavy teaching load carried by Dr. Alyn and other faculty members. Finally, the nursing department is seeking more scholarship funding for students.

In spite of these needs, the nursing department is working very hard to prepare individuals to practice as nurses in a variety of nursing roles and health care settings. The carefully planned curriculum combined with the knowledge and experience of the faculty will prove to be a great asset to Cedarville College and its academic progress.

Veteran Missionary Never Gives Up

Patsy King

Several ingredients which are indispensable to any successful mission work are dedication, patience, and diligence. Patsy King ('57) lacks none of these qualities, as can be seen by her thriving ministry in Bangassou, Central African Republic. Her many-faceted responsibilites have ranged from teaching children in Awana Clubs to training nationals for the pastorate in camps and in a Bible school in Bangassou. Since her arrival in Africa in 1960, Miss King has acquired a great reservoir of experience which has aided her greatly in the many roles she has had to fill in a field where there are seemingly never enough workers.

Originally from North Jackson, Ohio, Miss King's preparation for the mission field began unofficially with her family and in her high school. As a result of her persistent testimony, Miss King was able to witness the conversion of her family, and years later was able to share her faith with a teacher who had made fun of her for carrying her Bible to school. Recently, Miss King was named outstanding alumna of her high school, a token of the respect which her community holds for her. "I appreciate that because when I was in high school nobody would listen," Miss King explained. This same "never give up" attitude Miss King learned from these experiences has been very helpful to her on the mission field.

Miss King's formal education began at Cedarville College in 1953. Her years at Cedarville were typically filled with hard work and active service. She reflects that the Christian services she was involved in were all "big helps" in preparing her for the mission field. These experiences included organizing Bible Clubs, membership in a student prayer band, and two summer missionary internships among the mountain people of Arkansas. As if these activities were not enough to keep her busy, Miss King also served as a counselor for Rife and Faith dormitories, was editor of the yearbook, and held several jobs. She remembers professors, such as Dr. Williams, who were very positive influences upon her life.

One Liners

$3918.67 was collected for the annual Student Missionary Project during the 1983-84 academic year. Several alumni were among the recipients of the students' generosity. Clifton ('72) and Hannah (Stowell '71) Jensen, Brazil, will use their gift to help with airplane parts and maintenance. Allen ('66) and Ruth (Hardy '69) Fisher, Africa, received a gift for the purchase of a Braille typewriter. The aid given to Elaine Schulte ('68) will replenish medical supplies on the Ivory Coast, Africa.

Dr. James T. Jeremiah will be conducting a special tour to Israel during the summer of 1985. Designed to attract alumni, this August 9-23 tour includes stops at Cyprus, Athens, Patmos, Ephesus, and Cairo while cruising in the Mediterranean Sea. The April 22-May 1 tour will cover the entire country of Israel from Dan in the north to Beersheba in the south. Write the alumni office for a brochure and more information.

The tuition free credit program offered during summer school to senior high school age children of Cedarville graduates attracted five students this summer. This program offers a $600 savings for the ten credit hours of class work.

Over 200 high school students, counselors, and coaches participated in soccer, volleyball, and men's and women's basketball camps this summer. The camps were sponsored by the Cedarville College athletic department.

Cedarville College welcomes seven new faculty and staff members for the fall quarter. Alumni Tim Bosworth ('71) and Dan Estes ('74) have accepted the postions of Dean of Men and Assistant Professor of Bible, respectively. Other new faculty members include: David Rotman, Business Department; Dr. Michael Lopez, Communication Arts Department; Lois Baker and Maureen Salladay, Nursing Department; and Dr. Douglas Miller, Science Department.

Speakers for the annual Pastors' Conference September 10-13, 1984, will include Dr. Daniel Gelatt, pastor of First Baptist Church of Elkhart, Indiana, and Dr. Donald Tyler, pastor of Bethesda Baptist Church, Brownsburg, Indiana. The theme is "Let the Church Grow." Concurrent with the Pastors' Conference will be "Church Music Celebration 1984" — a new conference for church and school music leaders and prospective music students. The conference is sponsored by the college's music department. Don Krueger will be the guest clinician.

A four-week summer tour of Europe will be conducted for the first time in July of 1985 by Cedarville College faculty. Art, music, and language will be explored firsthand. For information, write to: Mark Larson, Cedarville College, Box 601, Cedarville, OH 45314.

Homecoming 1984 "Memories of a Lifetime"

Friday, October 19

Homecoming – an annual alumni highlight – full of fond memories for all – redesigned schedule to facilitate returning and remembering – special activities for those celebrating reunions – it all adds up to be one of the most exciting weekends on the Cedarville campus. The activities begin on Friday at 5 p.m. with the Heritage Alumni Reunion Banquet. Scheduled especially for alumni who graduated before 1953, a short program is planned, with ample time for visiting and reacquainting. The Prism V concert, which has become a Homecoming tradition, is scheduled for 8 p.m. in the James T. Jeremiah Chapel, followed by the annual alumni ice cream social, held in the College Center Dining Hall.

Saturday, October 20

8:30 a.m. arrivals will be rewarded with a continental breakfast provided by the Alumni Association and hosted by the campus academic departments. Gathering according to majors, the topic around coffee, juice, and doughnuts will be, "What are you doing with your major?" "What does Cedarville College do to educate students in the area of...?

At 9 a.m. the class reunions (for those classes ending in 4 and 9) will be meeting in the location designated in their respective class letter.

Following the 11 a.m. parade (note time change!), all alumni are invited to enjoy lunch together in the Athletic Center. Always an annual highlight, the classes celebrating reunions, along with all alumni, will enjoy the sounds of one of the college musical teams, President Dixon's address, and the presentation of the Alumni Association's annual awards. A special program and supervised meal will be provided for your children during the Alumni Luncheon.

After lunch, join the Yellow Jackets for their soccer game against Mt. Vernon Nazarene College. A post-game farewell reception in the Heritage Square will complete the day's activities. Be watching for the soon forthcoming Homecoming material with registration information!

See you in October

Grads Fight...

Dr. Daniel Taylor

Daniel L. Taylor, a graduate of the class of 1979, has distinguished himself among Cedarville College alumni as the first known graduate to enter the field of dentistry. At Cedarville he pursued a combination biology/chemistry major, and following graduation entered The Ohio State University in Columbus, Ohio, where he obtained the Doctor of Dental Surgery degree in June of 1983. Shortly following his graduation, Dan set up private practice with his father who has been in dentistry for 31 years in downtown Columbus.

Taylor acknowledged that his training at Cedarville College compared well with Ohio State academically and stressed, "the good student-teacher ratio is a big plus for Cedarville." The small class size allowed the one-on-one relationship which took place in the science department classroom and was an important feature in his educational experience at Cedarville. He went on to say that he received a solid background in the basic sciences from Cedarville and was prepared very well for dental school on both an educational and spiritual level. He also noted that the spiritual truths he learned at Cedarville enabled him to make decisions from a spiritual perspective during and after graduate school.

Another aspect of Cedarville which aided Dan's career was his experience as a personnel assistant in his dorm, West Hall. He remarks, "This experience taught me how to deal with people, which is what dentistry is all about."

As a student, Dan's interest in the medical field was demonstrated by his active participation on the Cedarville College Rescue Squad. When the squad began its fund raising for a new ambulance, he recognized the importance of this project and was one of the first students to be involved in this $40,000 venture.

On two occasions, Taylor has had the unusual opportunity of traveling with his father to mission sites where they performed dental surgery. This is a voluntary ministry designed to enhance the work of the missionaries by providing free medical and dental services to the nationals. The Taylors' most recent trip was to Haiti where they stayed one week on a Baptist Mid-Missions compound, working with the missionaries and a medical doctor who designed this program known as Operation Compassion. A previous trip was made to the island of St. Lucia. Dan appreciates these experiences as they have been spiritually uplifting and have provided an opportunity to see other cultures. He plans to go on many more such trips in the future.

One of Dan's interests is golf. During his college career he earned three varsity letters as a member of Cedarville's golf team. Dan returns to campus often, especially for the Cedarville Baptist Open golf tournament in which he has played every year since 1975. He resides at 1968 Drury Lane, Columbus, Ohio.

The 1984 Salutatorian of Case Western Reserve University's dental school in Cleveland, Ohio, is Cedarville alumnus Craig Colas ('80).

Colas graduated from Case Western Reserve University on May 25, 1984. His high academic ranking (second in his class) combined with his clinical ranking earned him the honor of being first overall. Colas' diligence did not go unnoticed. At commencement exercises he received several awards, among them the Callahan Prize. Colas was chosen by the faculty for this award for his outstanding achievement. He was also inducted into Omicron Kappa Upsilon, a dental honor society which includes the top 10% of every graduating class.

Colas' track record for strong leadership was clearly demonstrated during his years at Cedarville College. He served as president of his class all four years and was a four-year letterman on the cross country team which won the NCCAA national title his junior and senior years. Colas' other activities included leading a Swordbearers team, holding a personnel assistant position in Lawlor Hall, and serving as president of the Varsity C Club. He was selected for Who's Who among Students in American Colleges and Universities and was named NCCAA All American at Large for his overall contribution to his school and cross country team.

Colas explains, "All the activities worked out well. They helped make me a well-rounded person and I was better prepared to put more energy into the field I wanted to study." He also believes that his extensive involvement has made him more self-confident, and has better enabled him to relate to people, especially his dental patients.

He notes that "dental school is harder...much harder," but that overall, "Cedarville did a really good job" of preparing him academically for further study. Colas remembers his years at Cedarville fondly. He particularly appreciated the influences of cross country coach Elvin King and former professor of philosophy James Grier. Concerning philosophy class Colas explains, "It was really beneficial. It made me think about why I believe what I believe. It's good preparation for going to a school where most people don't believe in Christ. If I had to do it over, I'd go to Cedarville College."

Colas is now doing his general practice residency at the Strong Memorial Hospital in Rochester, New York. He was chosen for this advanced program which provides training in oral surgery, orthodontics, pedodontics, and endodontics in a hospital setting. Colas' future goal is to own his own dental practice and long range goals include teaching in a dental school

Craig and his wife Nancy (Tenney '81) reside at 264 Quinby Road, Rochester, New York, with their six month old son, Brandon.

Grosh Resigns Council

Alumni Association Officer and Alumni Council Member Ron Grosh ('67) recently submitted his resignation to the Council. Ron faithfully served the Association as Vice-President two years, President four years, Immediate Past President under the old structure, and has served as a member of the Alumni Council for the past seven years — a total of 15 years of dedicated service to the Alumni Association.

Working with the Association's constitution, Aviso, award citations, and letter writing have been a part of his interest. As associate professor of English at Cedarville College, Ron also has been very busy with teaching, serving on college committees, researching, and professional writing. In addition to post doctoral work, speaking engagements, and his family responsibilities, Ron is also the acting superintendent at nearby Springfield Christian School.

Because of the quality of leadership the Association has attained and because of pressing professional commitments,

Ron has decided to step down from the Council.

The Council appreciates Ron's dedication and service to Cedarville College and the Alumni Association and reluctantly accepts his resignation. The Council has chosen Loren Reno ('70) to complete the remaining three-and-a-half years of Ron's term.

Martin Clark Assumes New Role

The Board of Trustees of Cedarville College is pleased to announce the appointment of Martin E. Clark, Ed.D., to the position of Vice-President of Development, replacing Mr. Charles Ross. Since 1974, Dr. Clark has held the position of Director of Counseling Services at Cedarville College.

Dr. Clark graduated from Bob Jones University in 1967 with a B.A. degree in Bible. He continued his education at Bob Jones University, receiving a masters degree in Bible in 1968. Dr. Clark's formal education was completed in 1974 when he received his Ed.D. degree from Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University.

Since 1968, Dr. Člark has served in several capacities. He has pastored churches in Blacksburg, Virginia, and Easton, Maine. In conjunction with his counseling responsibilities at Cedarville College, Dr. Clark has conducted a private counseling practice with adults and has maintained an active speaking ministry in churches, retreats, Bible conferences, schools, and other settings.

Dr. Clark brings much experience to his new role as Vice-President of Development. Since 1978 he has assisted the Development Department in research and writing proposals and has held the position of Director of Planning since 1982. His new responsibilities include overseeing the Development Department which includes the Planned Giving, Alumni Relations, Public Relations, and Church Relations Offices.

Dr. Clark and his wife Bonnie-jean have two daughters, Cherish and Mackenzie.

After graduating from Cedarville in 1957, Miss King completed her mission training with Baptist Mid-Missions and began her work in Africa. In Bangassou, "King-ee" (as she is called by the children there) has met many challenges. Several cults and religious sects pervert the gospel and lead the nationals astray. There are two language barriers (French and Sango) which make communication difficult at times. Perhaps the greatest problem faced by missionaries in the Central African Republic is the nationals who do not remain firm in the faith that they profess. Often yielding to cultural pressures, these young Christians will fall into sin and are no longer able to be used as leaders in the churches.

In spite of these challenges, Miss King has been able to have an effective ministry in Bangassou. In the 24 years she has served there have been many converts, many churches strengthened, and camps set up for training young people in the Christian faith. Although there have been no converts among the Muslims, Miss King has earned their love and respect as a friend. This difficult task has been accomplished by simple acts of service, such as transporting patients to the hospitals and visiting with the sick who are there. "You try to use your time in the way in which it will best produce for eternity," Miss King commented.

There is much to be done in the Central African Republic. The responsibility of an area the size of Ohio rests heavily on the shoulders of Patsy King. The ministry of missionaries is welcome in Bangassou, however, more workers are needed. "To me the most important support is prayer support," Miss King explained. Support the mission work and the people of the Central African Republic in this manner so that other, more tangible means of support will be provided.

"The Doctor Is Out"

Dr. Norman Linton

Dr. Norman G. Linton, after practicing general medicine in Jamestown, Ohio, for 35 years, retired last November.

Dr. Linton ('42N), who decided he wanted to be a doctor early in life, began his education in a one-room school at Bowersville, Ohio. In 1938, Linton came to Cedarville College. When asked his reason for choosing Cedarville, Dr. Linton commented, "I probably went there because my two older brothers did." (Walter, '35, resides in Pleasant Hill, Ohio, and Roy, '38, lives in San Diego, California.) Because Cedarville did not offer a major which would accommodate Linton's career goals, he completed the last two years of his undergraduate studies at The Ohio State University in 1941-42. In 1944, Dr. Linton completed his medical education at the University of Louisville Medical School. Linton explains, "Then I interned at Miami Valley Hospital and met a nurse, Jane Compton, who is now Mrs. Linton." Following his internship, Linton established a family practice at Mercy Hospital in Hamilton, Ohio. He served as a military medical officer in the Philippines and Korea in 1946-47.

"In 1948, after I got out of the Army, I became a partner with the late Dr. R. L. Haines. What's unusual about that is that he was the doctor that delivered me in 1920."

As he reminisced about his career, Linton remembered that in three and a half decades he has delivered well over a thousand babies. He said that he made house and farm calls "right up to the day I retired." In his estimation, the Salk and Sabin anti-polio vaccines have been the most important advances in medicine since 1948.

Dr. Linton has been active in the Jamestown Methodist Church, Jamestown Lions Club, Greene County Medical Society, Greene Memorial Hospital, American Medical Association, Jamestown American Legion, Greeneview High School Boosters Club, and Cedarville College Alumni functions.

The Lintons are parents of four children. Kent is an eye specialist in Utah, and Scott is a San Diego attorney. Their two daughters are Nancy Ary of Columbus and Sue Schmidlin of Cincinnati. There are six Linton grandchildren.

In April 1983, the Jamestown community expressed its appreciation for his years of service by awarding him the fourth annual Community Service award. Since retirement, the Lintons plan to winter in Arizona and summer in Jamestown. Dr. Linton will farm, and when that becomes a chore, he will focus his efforts on satisfying his voracious appetite for books. Reflecting on his life's work, Dr. Linton remarked, "The only trouble with my career in medicine was that it went by too fast. It was a most satisfactory experience."

"Cedarville College afforded me the opportunity to an education that I might not have been able to receive elsewhere," stated retiring Beavercreek High School principal John Townsley. "My parents recognized the importance of an education, and having received some of their education at Cedarville College they encouraged us to do the same." John graduated in 1950, while sisters Mary Jean (who married Howard Swaim '38) and Doris (Mrs. John Sanders) graduated in 1941 and 1946 respectively. They are the children of Fred ('15N) and Rachel (Tarbox '16N) Townsley.

The emphasis that my parents placed on learning, in addition to college professors who were interested in me as a person, were important factors that directed me to a career in education," explained Mr. Townsley. John recalls, however, that after high school it was his interest in sports, particularly basketball, that prompted him to pursue the college ranks.

John's prowess on the hardwood was further developed by Cedarville College Coach Mendall Beattie whom Townsley remembers as "extremely bright and dedicated to all the boys he worked with." John's successful career is highlighted by his Second Team All Ohio selection in his senior year, his 44 point game against Chase College, and the 1948 NAIA tournament game in Kansas City, Missouri, which was Cedarville College's first of four trips to this national tournament.

Following graduation Townsley began teaching and coaching in the small northeastern Ohio town of Conneaut. After a two year interruption as a radar repairman in the U.S. Army, which included a short stay in the Aleutian Islands off the coast of Alaska during the Korean War, he returned to Conneaut for a year. Recognizing the need for more education, John began working on a masters degree in elementary administration at Miami University while teaching in Farmersville, Ohio.

Mr. and Mrs. Townsley started with the Beavercreek School System as a package deal. His wife Millicent taught fourth grade while John taught and coached in the junior high. He later spent four years as a principal of Main and West Main Elementary schools before becoming assistant high school principal. Two and a half years later (1963) Townsley was named high school principal and has remained there until his retirement this summer. He has no specific plans for the future other than catching up on activities around his home.

What has been the biggest change Townsley has seen over the years among high school students? "Attitudes" he says. "We (students and teachers or administrators) don't always agree, but there are no more underground newspapers or student strikes. The anti-establishment years are over and kids are recognizing the proper channels for communicating and the extreme value of an education." Townsley said he sees the future of education as going back to the academic basics of math, English, science, foreign languages, and social science.

Reflecting on his profession, Townsley stated he has received "a lot of satisfaction out of a service oriented job. There are too many successful products to mention, but it's great to have had at least a small part in the successes of many young men and women."
