OLD SCIENCE CENTER RENOVATED

Very few alumni are unable to recall the cement floors, oak tables, and 12-foot ceilings of the Cedarville College Science Building. The dual stairways, well illuminated by glass block skylights have been well worn by the feet of every Cedarville student for more than fifty years.

In recent years however, the aging building has come under verbal attack. As a Science Center it was "frightfully deficient". For classroom instruction it would simply be "unsuitable" and "not appropriate".

But all that has changed.

There are now paneled offices, carpeted class and conference rooms, and educational facilities of admirable quality. The old brick walls, sporting attractive orange and yellow glazes, are brilliant illustrations of the rejuvenating process that is launching the "Old Science Building" into its second lifetime as Collins Hall, the new home for the College's Education, Business, and Psychology departments.

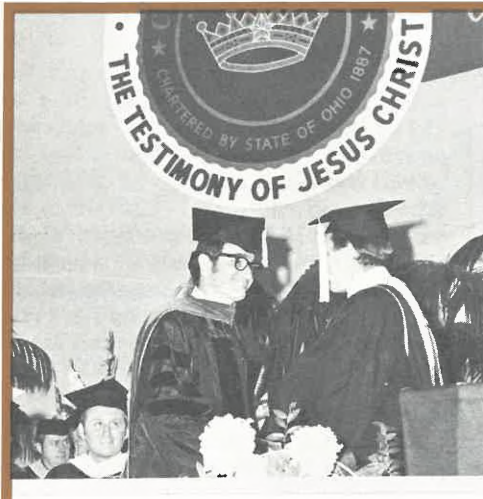

This exciting transformation is being made possible by alumni generosity combined with deliberate planning on the part of the family of the late Andrew Gordon and Mary Rife Collins. Through a special memorial fund, conceived as a result of a single anonymous gift in 1970, the Collins sons and daughters are contributing $50,000 in honor of their parents.

Andrew Collins, a lifetime resident of Cedarville, was extremely active in religious, educational and civic responsibilities. His influence to build Cedarcliff School at its present location was a significant contribution to Cedarville's history. The more popular setting, just north of "Old Main" would have seriously hindered the College's physical growth.

At graduation ceremonies last month, President Jeremiah, in announcing the official designation of Collins Hall, expressed thanks to the family and noted the fact that all eight of the Collins sons and daughters were graduates of Cedarville College.

The entire family was able to be present for the announcement and were recognized not only for their gift to the College, but also for the success which each member has achieved as an alumnus of Cedarville College.

Educator Award Given

Dr. Robert Gromacki

Dr. Robert Glenn Gromacki, chairman of Cedarville College's Biblical Education department, has been selected by the Alumni Executive Committee as the first recipient of the association's Distinguished Educator Award. The award, which was created by alumni vote in 1972, is a recognition award designed to honor the attainment of outstanding professional stature.

In presenting the award as a part of the College's June 7th commencement exercises, Ron Grosh, Cedarville Alumni President, cited Dr. Gromacki's significant contribution through research and publication in the field of Biblical Studies as well as his exemplary conduct in the classroom and before his colleagues.

It is hoped that the Distinguished Educator Award, which is accompanied by a gift of three hundred dollars, will have the effect of stimulating further productivity and contributing to a spirit of academic leadership within the faculty of Cedarville College.

SOUNDING BOARD

Dear Alumnus:

Perhaps a corollary condition to being an alumnus of an institution is the tendency to focus on "the good old days" to the detriment of seeing present needs and challenges. But in this issue of the AVISO are several articles which illustrate Cedarville alumni in action meeting the needs and challenges.

The Collins memorial gift for the renovation of the old Science building, now Collins Hall and already two-thirds remodeled and quite functional, is one example of alumni thoughtfully and thankfully nurturing the education of future generations of college students.

The Association's Distinguished Educational Award, in its own way, is designed to accomplish a similar purpose, by giving recognition to individuals meeting today's challenges in Christian education at Cedarville.

Now, as we wind down our emphasis on the new Science Center and turn our attention toward meeting the need for a new chapel at Cedarville, please voluntarily and thoughtfully give strong consideration to including the chapel fund in your personal, regular stewardship program, and encourage your church to do likewise.

God prosper you as you serve Him,

Ron Grosh

WILLIAM RIFE COLLINS

William, a 1918 U.S. History graduate, married Edith St. John, an alumnus of Ohio Wesleyan University, and, after superintending the schools of Ross Township and West Liberty, Ohio, joined the MacMillan Publishing Company as a textbook representative. He authored Ohio, The Buckeye State, an 8th grade text, while serving as a curriculum consultant and Director of MacMillan's Chicago office.

M. EARLE COLLINS

M. Earle Collins, class of '23, continued his education at Ohio State University, receiving a Ph.D. in College Administration. He served as Superintendent of Greene County Schools before moving with his wife, Mary Dixon Collins, to Missouri. There, Earle became President, first of Tarkio College, then of Missouri Valley College. He received the LLD from Cedarville in 1948, and, as President Emeritus of Missouri Valley, the LHD from that institution in 1974.

Science Center Campaign Ends

The Alumni of Cedarville College have now contributed over $100,000 for the campus' new Science Center. This achievement, which marks the end of the association involvement in the project, culminates seven years of consistent support by almost 30% of the College's graduates and former students.

The Science Center campaign, which included the special Alumni Annex program, has been the most ambitious venture in the alumni association's history. The result has been the provision of 10% of the facility's total cost, a contribution which will be permanently acknowledged by a plaque at the entrance to the Biological Science Wing.

Never before have the alumni responded to such a degree.

It has been said before that the strength of a college may be measured by the extent of its alumni support. If this is true, Cedarville's best days are yet to come, for her alumni, renewed in strength and concern, are beginning to accept a significant role in the College's growth and development.

chapter footnotes

A significant association milestone was reached during the month of May as the first Cedarville Alumni Chapters came into existence. The chapters are designed to provide a balanced program of social activities, educational ministries and service opportunities, and will continue to be developed on a regular basis in areas where alumni interest is shown.

Delaware Valley Alumni Chapter

The Delaware Valley Chapter, serving the Philadelphia and Southern New Jersey area was created from more festive stuff.

Undaunted by the dry cake and sour coffee cream, the Easterners were not content with the conservative organizational schedule, quickly moving not only to elect officers, but also to levy annual dues, some of which were collected on the spot.

As the hours passed, plans for a summer meeting developed and the Delaware Valley Chapter was well on its way to success.

Greater Dayton Area Alumni Chapter

The Bronze Room of the Dayton Inn was the setting for the inaugural event attended by 30 Southwestern Ohio alumni. Class representation stretched from 1946-1974.

The organizational process began after a brief program, with the distribution of the Cedarville Alumni Chapter Handbook. Responsibilities were then chosen and chairmen elected for the five loosely organized committees which will provide the chapter with programming, alumni relations, public relations, and student recruitment capabilities.

What About Home Missions?

In 1950, it was reported that the population of the U.S. was 150 million. Today, that figure has risen to more than 200 million, and the estimate is that by 1980 the population will have risen to as high as 300 million. It has also been estimated that there is a need for 3,000 new churches to be established annually in order to meet the "religious" needs of our people. But statistics show that less than 1,500 new churches are being established by all groups or individuals combined.

One mission board gave these figures in a pamphlet which I recently read. The writer stated that "one out of three Americans is completely pagan, that is, they have no affiliation with a Protestant church, or a Roman Catholic communion, nor a Jewish synagogue, nor one of the heretical isms or cults". What a sobering thought. That means that at least one-third of our people are lost.

There seems to be a great trend toward foreign missions in our circles today. Indeed, there is a real need on the foreign fields around the world—Bangladesh, Africa, Brazil, the Philippines—all of these present us with a great challenge. But what about home missions? I fear that many of us have neglected to consider what its role might be, even here at home. Home missions is viewed by many as a last resort or as that forsaken task which falls upon their shoulders because they were not accepted to go to a "foreign" field.

Since June 15, 1974, I have been working with Pastor Ezell Wiggins, a Fellowship of Baptists for Home Missions Pastor, in Des Moines, Iowa. I have been filling the positions of Assistant Pastor, Youth Director, Christian Ed. Director, and Sunday School teacher. You may ask, "Why so many positions?" The answer is one which any missionary pastor could easily answer—lack of personnel.

There is a great need for men and women to take part in the establishment and development of Bible-believing churches. There is also a need for trained workers who are willing to assist in the programs of the churches, once they have been established. Pastor Wiggins has been here in Des Moines for nearly 15 years. In that period of time, other than the students at Faith Baptist Bible College, there has been no assistance of any measurable degree. How many other pastors are there around the country who find themselves in the very same position?

What about home missions? Have you seriously considered that this may be the area of service which the Lord has for you? The needs are tremendous—youth, music, Sunday School, visitation, personal growth. Is there a place for you in home missions? I trust that the Lord will burden your heart to make it a matter of prayer.
