the 1990s, the number of people with a diagnosis of schizophrenia has increased in many countries, including the United Kingdom (Murray & Lewis, 1998). The prevalence of schizophrenia is estimated to be 1% of the population (Murray & Lewis, 1998).

There is a growing awareness of the need to improve the lives of people with schizophrenia. This has led to a focus on the development of self-help materials, which can be used by people with schizophrenia to help them to manage their condition and to improve their quality of life (Murray & Lewis, 1998).

One of the main aims of self-help materials is to help people to understand their condition and to learn how to manage it. This can be done by providing information about the symptoms of schizophrenia and how to deal with them. It can also be done by providing information about the treatment of schizophrenia and how to take medication.

This can be done by providing information about the importance of coping strategies and how to develop them. It can also be done by providing information about the benefits of self-help and how to use it.

Self-help materials can also be used to help people to improve their problem-solving skills and to deal with difficult situations. This can be done by providing information about the importance of problem-solving skills and how to develop them. It can also be done by providing information about the benefits of self-help and how to use it.

This can be done by providing information about the importance of communication skills and how to develop them. It can also be done by providing information about the benefits of self-help and how to use it.

Self-help materials can also be used to help people to improve their decision-making skills and to deal with difficult choices. This can be done by providing information about the importance of decision-making skills and how to develop them. It can also be done by providing information about the benefits of self-help and how to use it.
