[Header:New Years Day 1873]

I cannot but copy at the beginning of these days the words of a writer for the .... The New Years which are as followed:__

The past has gone from us never to return. The future his before us sure as the...and dim snow, we choose to make it so, [?] black and turbid as the [?] ocean, Ours The Choice!

This pure life is only obtained through our abiding faith in Jesus and [?] of his holy influence we can not live in happiness peace and Contentment. The mass intimate lives will become & indifferent to us if we do not melt the piece which has gathered about them in the warm rays of the sun of righteousness.

Who of us does not need more of this spirit of this spirit; a more realizing sense of fool's love to us, as the great sauce of this affection to one another.

The year which is passed is covered with sin and sorrow, grief and graves, Joy[?] and woes. Can not we [?] the experiences of the past, so that in these year upon which we are now entering, we may live purer and bright lives and may reap a richer harvest.

God grant that we may choose that better part which shall not be taken from us.
