The Syrian Refugee Crisis

Our primary goal in this presentation is to provide a comprehensive review of literature as it pertains to the influence of the Syrian Refugee crisis in Jordan, Turkey and Germany. These countries have experienced an enormous influx of refugees which has caused a need for economic and political concern. First, we will examine the history of Syrian Civil War that led to the displacement of Syrian individuals and families. Second, we will evaluate the effects of Syrian migration on the economical and political situation in Jordan, Turkey, Germany. We will discuss the various policies implemented in each of the countries that either hinder or promote development and sustainability due to the change in population. We will propose policies that are both beneficial to the structure of these countries and supportive of the humanitarian well-being of the refugees themselves. In conclusion, we will discuss the implications that the refugee crisis has on the USA as well as practical steps we can take in our locally to support the incoming Syrian refugees who will resettle in our communities.
