Sunny Side Up: An Optimistic Book on Loving God

CEDARVILLE, OHIO -- Scrambled. Over easy. Mixed with grits. Side of bacon. No matter how you like your eggs, “Sunny Side Up” might make them taste a little bit better.

Dr. Dan DeWitt, Cedarville University’s director of the Center for Biblical Apologetics and Public Christianity and associate professor of applied theology and apologetics, just released his new book titled “Sunny Side Up” on February 1.

“Sunny Side Up” unpacks the conversation Peter and Jesus had over breakfast in the last chapter of John’s gospel. The book highlights Peter’s restoration and the importance of what Jesus said to him. “In this short conversation we see God’s will for Peter’s life, and by application, our life as well,” said DeWitt.

He writes to Christians who do not love God as much as they have in the past and encourages them to rekindle that flame.

DeWitt warns readers of the potential dangers of success and leads them back to the main issue, loving God. “It’s dangerously possible to grow in our knowledge of God without growing in our love for God,” wrote DeWitt in the book.

DeWitt views himself as a translator between academia and the church pew and aims to write in a manner that the average church reader can understand. “Sunny Side Up” can be found on Amazon or on the website of the Good Book Company.
