It may interest renders to know that rather over 100 years ago in 160%, to be precise—the country was worshiping at the chrine of a twelve-year-old prodigy, a boy netor —the juvenile Henry Irving of his time, says the Glasgow Mail. While at the height of his same and popularity this infantile marvel visited. among other places, Glasgow and Edinburgh, and in both of these towns he is said to have created a hitherto-undreams of sensation.—

The wonderful youngster's name was William Henry West Betty, and he was Irish to the backbone. His histrionie capabilities were evidently born with him, for it is recorded that when at the age of eight his father treated him to his first visit to the theater young Betty at the conclusion of the play solemnly informed his parent that he had decided to be an actor himself.

How the youngster subsequently came to get a footing on the stage is not known, but in the month of August, 1803, we find him making his first appearance, performing the leading part in a popular drama at a Belfast theater. He leaped at one bound into the very forefront of popularity, and it is said that on one occasion when he turned ill the whole aution awaited with feverish anxiety the different bulletins which were regularly issued to tell of young Betty's condition.

The boy's first appearance in Glasgow, which happened in May, 1804, created unpainlieled enthusiasm in the city during the several nights he performed in the now long defunct Dunlop Street theater. The enormous growds that flocked to see the wonderful boy were unprecedented in the theatrical history of St. Mungo; and hundreds, it is said, were nightly injured in the great crush and desperate struggle for admission to the theater. In Edinburgh, where the boy actor afterward appeared, the same enormous crowds rushed to see him. To quote from one of the local paper's criticisms, he "sot the town in a finne." His subsequent appearance ut the world famous Drury Lane completed the prodigy's triumph, for it was not long before the metropolis also succumbed to young Hefty's magnetic acting-But Master Betty's stage success was comparatively short lived. In the course of a few years he-or his parents—compiled at immense fortune, and with the wealth thus predily necumulated the young actor was given the chance of a first class education. When out of his teens the giamour of the footlights ngain appeared to have appealed to him, and he again made a bid to regain his position as a popular idol. By this time, however, the people had quite forgotten their former hero, and young Betty had to rest content with only a very ordinary degree of success. He had, so to speak, overstayed his welcome.

Room For Improvement. One day during the religarsals of "The Tempest," which opens with a storm at sec, all the actors except Beerbolum Tree knew that a real storm was raging outside the theater. Mr. Tree never knows anything at reheareal time except that he wants to get the best possible out of his company. He was especially anxious that the opening scene should be rendered as true to nature as pos-sible, and time after time he made the men whose duty it was to suggest to the audience the ungoverna-ble fury of the elements repeat their citorts. Presently a blinding flash of lightning, followed by a deafen-ing peal of thunder, swept through a narrow window above the scene dock and illuminated the stage. "That's better," announced Mr. Tree, "but I think it could be improved upon."

"If you please, sir," observed the master carpenter, "that was a rea-Flour Too Low. A Portland man tells of a shift-

THEFT DISCOVERED

Officer Kennon made a timely

The barn being covered with a board flooring made all unnecessary movements of the horse very noticcable during the quick licurs of the night. The officer being near by on Main street concluded that something must be wrong and when he got to the street alongside the barn he noticed two men leading the horse from the barnyard gate. The horse had been taken from the barn by the rear door.

Seeing that the men were making away with the horse the officer called to them to halt under threat of shooting. This only made them run the faster. When near the Baptist church three shots were fired and the horse broke loose and went on out Walnut street back of the Alford Memorial Hall. The two men escaped in the darkness. Just as the officer was ready to draw his gun on the men at one time the horse ran between them, and it became impossible for him to shoot without fear of shooting the horse. The men always protected themsolves behind the borse.

Mr. Winter was aroused and a search made but the men made good their escape. It is reported that a horse was stolen at Fairfield and one at Dayton the same night which makes things appear as if there were more than the one horse singled out by the same crowd.

A CALL TO THANKSGIVING.

The Chief Executive of our nation as called upon us, to observe the 26th day of November as a day of thanksgiving. And he has cited some of the great material blessings we have enjoyed as a nation. Sharing in these and enjoying many local blessings, should not the offizens of Cedarville and vicinity enter into the genuine spirit of thanksgiving and personally particpatein the public services of that day? To say nothing of the blessings we as families and individuals have received, the following may be pointed to as enjoyed by the

The fields have yielded abundant crops; the general health has not been endangered by an epidemic; superior work has been done in the public schools and college; local business can point to no fallures and society to no public disgrace; Codarville township stood first among the townships and Cecarville corporation second among the corporations in the vote against the saloons in Greene county, indicaling a high average moral sentiment against this great evil; and the spirit of Christian fellowship among the churches was never better. These blessings have been enjoyed not because of our special merit; they have come to us from cod, the Great Giver of all good, because of Jesus Christ our Lord.

Recognizing this, the Ministerial Association of Cedarville has arranged for Union Thanksgiving services to be held in the Methorist throughout Ohio. Write us TO- Episcopal church, Thursday, Nev.
