CMC Librarians recognized as part of the 40th anniversary celebration for the Curriculum Materials Center

As part of the celebration of the 40th anniversary of the Curriculum Materials Center, the three CMC Librarians who have served during that time were honored. Judy Lowstetter began her service in 1984, provided leadership for the transition of the CMC from the supervision of the Education department to the Library and eventually the move of the collection from Williams Hall to the new Centennial Library, and continued to serve as CMC Librarian until 1989. In that year, Joyce Riggs became the second CMC Librarian, serving until 2002. During that period the position was elevated from a staff position to full-time faculty status. Joyce had to go through the faculty interview process steps in that transition. In 2002, Greg Martin became the third CMC Librarian and currently directs the operation. These three were presented with a plaque to be placed in the CMC which recognizes the 40th anniversary and their contributions to the success of this service.

Centennial Library Distinguished Service Award

Certificates of Recognition for Distinctive Service are given for important achievements advancing Centennial Library services as well as for significant contributions to the service and reputations of the Centennial Library. This year a Certificate was given to the MediaPLEX Team, under the leadership of Carl Brandon, in recognition of the successful launch of the Centennial Library MediaPLEX and their enthusiastic commitment to and service support for this creative multi-media production hub for our University students and faculty.

The Top Scholar Award goes to the graduating senior Student Library Assistant who has the highest grade point average. Library Faculty Member To Travel To Oxford For Part Of The Summer

Julie Deardorff, Assistant Library Director for Collection Services, will be team-teaching a class this summer as part of the Cedarville University Department of International Programs. Julie and her husband, Don Deardorff, Professor of English, are teaching The English Novel (LIT 3310) to a class of 11 Cedarville students at Oxford University in England from May 27-June 26. The students will also each take a tutorial on a subject of their choice with an Oxford professor. A number of field trips are planned, including a Shakespeare performance at Stratford-upon-Avon, excursions to Windsor and Blenheim castles, London, and Jane Austen’s Bath. Oxford University lecturers will also take the class on a walking tour of sites associated with C. S. Lewis and Dorothy Sayers in Oxford. In addition, Julie will spend time with Oxford University librarians focusing on their collection development practices.
In order to augment the items of American origin in the Bible Heritage Collection, two Bible pages from the early Colonial period were recently purchased. The first is a page from a 1663 Eliot Bible. Many are surprised to discover that the first Bible printed in America was not an English or European language Bible, but an Algonquin Indian Bible in the Natick dialect published between 1660 and 1663 by the missionary John Eliot. Eliot’s Bible did much more than bring the Gospel to one of the native tribes in America; it also gave them literacy. Eliot had to first reduce the spoken language to print and then translate the English Bible into the Algonquin language. Eliot agreed to learn the Algonquin spoken language, and they agreed to learn the western world’s phonetic alphabet, and then Eliot translated the Bible into their native tongue phonetically using the English alphabet. Pages from the Eliot Algonquin Bible remain some of the most rare and historically important artifacts of our American heritage. The page added to the Centennial Library collection is from an Eliot Indian Bible printed in Cambridge, Massachusetts, by Samuel Green and Marmaduke Johnson between 1660 and 1663. The text on the two pages is from Ezekiel 25:1 to 27:12.

The second page is from an Aitken Bible printed in 1782, which was the first complete English Bible printed in America. Up until the American Revolution, all Bibles in English had been imported to the Colonies from England. But during the Revolution, Bibles were not available because of the embargo on English imported goods. The printing of the New Testament by Robert Aitken started with preliminary copies in 1777 and the final copies were printed in 1781. The addition of the Old Testament followed in 1782. Aitken’s printing of the King James Version came to be called the “Bible of the Revolution” because it was small enough to fit into the coat pocket of the soldiers of the Continental Army. This Bible was the only one ever authorized by the United States Congress, part of whose resolution said: “they recommend this edition of the Bible to the inhabitants of the United States, and hereby authorize him [Mr. Aitken] to publish this recommendation in the manner he shall think proper.” The page added to the Centennial Library collection is from a Bible printed in Philadelphia in 1782, Robert Aitken’s first and only edition. The text from the King James Version on the two pages is from I Corinthians 7:1 to 8:7.

Requests to see these important additions to the Bible Heritage collection, or any of the rare Bibles that are a part of this collection, should be directed to Lynn Brock, Dean of Library Services.

Carrying the Torch to Their World

Susan Joy Clark, (Class of 1994)

This book, written for young adults, is about a 6th grade Christian girl who is best friends with a Jewish violin player, also a 6th grader. Their friendship is broken due to the difference in their faiths. A group of boys, part of a gang, commit a series of anti-Semitic and bullying acts in the school, affecting the young Jewish girl and her heirloom violin, which has a history dating back to the Holocaust. The young Christian girl and her family have an opportunity to show Christian love to the Jewish girl and her brother. The story focuses on this relationship and one of the boys in the gang who is struggling with what he has done. The author is a free-lance writer who directs a puppet ministry in her church.

Summer 2008 at the Library

Construction

With the completion of the Center for Biblical and Theological Studies getting nearer, major work will begin on all the exterior concrete walks between the Library, Apple, and the new Center. Thus, many of the sidewalks, ramps, walls, and steps around the Library will be replaced or re- configured beginning immediately after Commencement. This work could affect the nature of access to the Library at times, especially for patrons with disabilities. For May and June, it is likely that handicapped access to the Library will be through the use of the ramp at the rear of the building with entry through the Library staff door at the loading dock. This extensive concrete work will create some inconveniences, but Library and University staff will assure that safe access to the Library is maintained throughout the construction period.

Service Hours

The public hours for the Library for the Summer of 2008 are detailed on the Library web site. The Curriculum Materials Center will be open during all the Library summer hours. However, MediaPLEX and AV Services will not be open during all the regular summer Library hours. Please check the Library web site for those variations. If you have questions about MediaPLEX services and hours, please contact Carl Brandon, Assistant Library Director for Media Services.

For those faculty needing assistance with media hardware, software, or classroom technology equipment during the summer school sessions, please contact Scott Deetz in AV Services at 7853 for scheduling and technical support.
