John Hart Named “Kentucky Colonel”

CEDARVILLE, OHIO – Cedarville University’s general counsel, John E. Hart, Esq., has been awarded the “Kentucky Colonel” recognition for his work to preserve religious liberty amongst legal issues in the context of Christian higher education.

Being named a Kentucky Colonel is the highest award given by the Commonwealth of Kentucky. Recipients are commissioned for their contributions to their community. The governor recognizes Kentucky Colonels by their service and accomplishments on the behalf of others.

James Newbury, partner at Steptoe & Johnson law firm in Lexington, Kentucky, awarded Hart with this title at the Council for Christian Colleges & Universities (CCCU) conference for counsel of CCCU schools on October 5. This conference is held to provide attorneys with opportunities to share knowledge and experiences in addressing about the legal challenges they face at their institutions.

Hart addressed issues related to Title IX at the conference, providing lessons learned from experiences at both Cedarville University and the University of Dayton. He gave a reminder to pray in challenging situations so that even in those circumstances, the Gospel is advanced and God is glorified.

In 2012, Hart returned to Cedarville, his alma mater, after over 25 years as general counsel at the University of Dayton. He oversees legal compliance, provides counsel and facilitates best practices for the long-term success of Cedarville University.
