Fifth Horsewoman of the Apocalypse

Jennifer Grathwal
Bluffton University

DigitalCommons@Cedarville provides a publication platform for fully open access journals, which means that all articles are available on the Internet to all users immediately upon publication. However, the opinions and sentiments expressed by the authors of articles published in our journals do not necessarily indicate the endorsement or reflect the views of DigitalCommons@Cedarville, the Centennial Library, or Cedarville University and its employees. The authors are solely responsible for the content of their work. Please address questions to dc@cedarville.edu.

Recommended Citation
Available at: http://digitalcommons.cedarville.edu/cedarvillereview/vol9/iss1/22
Fifth Horsewoman of the Apocalypse

Browse the contents of this issue of Cedarville Review.

Creative Commons License

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-Noncommercial-No Derivative Works 4.0 License.

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.cedarville.edu/cedarvillereview

Part of the Poetry Commons

This poetry is available in Cedarville Review: http://digitalcommons.cedarville.edu/cedarvillereview/vol9/iss1/22
A cross-legged tragedy smokes out the broken back porch that was meant for executions in a five part harmony against the stars and cars outside.
She locks her little lips around a guillotine rolled between her fingers—nicotine among the mixture—that was meant to suffocate the world with every sharp exhale.
Here she’ll crucify all that’s outside the faded yellow walls, in a suburban wasteland where there are no heretics—only hypocrites, she always describes the world this way:
people only walk their dog when they feel guilty for drowning kittens in the basement.
Sure, there isn’t a line forming to canonize her into sainthood; she’ll say that too but not much else because there isn’t time to waste on words, when the air’s waiting to be polluted.
She keeps all her skeletons in the closet and the monsters in her bed though she counts on killing all those boys with secondhand smoke—yeah, she hopes she’ll be around to see them choke, but what more would the world expect from a girl rolling all of her own cigarettes outside on her back porch.